

Anjali Reddy

From: Lisa Mendelson [lmendelson@clsdc.com]
Sent: Friday, May 13, 2011 3:58 PM
To: Kenya
Subject: National Geographic's upcoming film "The First Grader" tells the compelling, true story of Kenyan Kimani Nganga Maruge

Click to view online

Did you know? National Geographic's upcoming film "The First Grader" tells the compelling, true story of Kenyan Kimani Nganga Maruge.

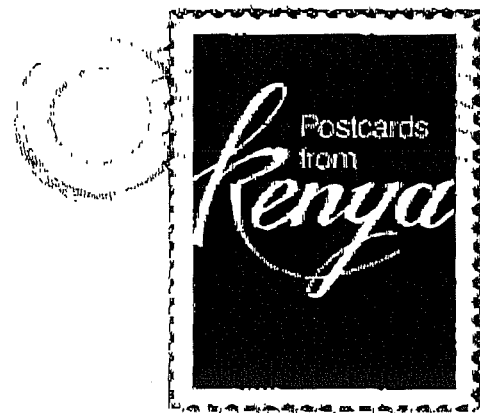

- Maruge, a freedom fighter who helped Kenya gain independence from Britain, attended school for the first time in his life at the age of 84, alongside his grandchildren.
- Maruge's education was made possible when the Kenyan government in 2003 made primary education free for all Kenyans. Until his death in 2009, Maruge was the Guinness World Record holder for being the oldest person to begin primary school.
- The film has received critical acclaim at the Toronto International Film Festival, the Telluride Film Festival and the Palm Beach International Film Festival, where it was named Best Feature Film. The film premieres in selected U.S. cities starting this month. For more info, visit www.thefirstgrader-movie.com.

Source: Indie Wire

Source: The Seattle Times

Source: Zenit

To learn more about Kenya
visit www.kenya.info

FACEBOOK

TWITTER

This email was sent to kenya@clsdc.com. If you are no longer interested you can unsubscribe instantly.